Professor Emeritus in the School of Computing and Information, University of Pittsburgh. Professor in Faculty of Computer Science, Białystok University of Technology, Poland. Listed among 2% highest ranking scientists in their disciplines World-wide by Elsevier (https://elsevier.digitalcommonsdata.com/datasets/btchxktzyw/4). Obtained and managed jointly over $8.0M in research grants. Authored and co-authored almost 200 scientific articles. Supervised 15 doctorates. Member of many editorial boards and conference program committees. Founding partner of BayesFusion, LLC, a corporation developing decision-theoretic software. Consulting for major corporations and U.S. government.

RESEARCH INTERESTS AND GOALS:

Probabilistic and decision-theoretic methods in decision support systems. User interfaces to decision support systems. Interactive and mixed-initiative systems for support of strategic planning within organizations.

My research focuses on building decision support systems that are based on sound principles of probability theory, statistics, and econometrics. Building such systems rests usually on a careful combination of expert knowledge and data analytics. Decision-theoretic systems have a proven track record in enhancing human capabilities for decision making in complex situations involving uncertainty and multiple conflicting objectives. In addition to theoretical and algorithmic issues, a crucial element of such systems is their user interface, which assists human decision makers in framing their decision problems, capturing their knowledge in terms of models and also gaining insight into the results of the systems' reasoning.

I pride myself in making the results of my research useful and applicable in practice. I took part in commercialization of GeNIe, QGeNIe and SMILE$^{\odot}$, all developed in my research laboratory, making them available free of charge for academic teaching and research. They belong currently to the most popular software for decision-theoretic methods in both academia and industry.
